Don’t send your students to the library, bring it to them! In addition to 1.8 million books and 5,000 journals, the NMSU Library provides access to over 20,000 eBooks, over 100 online databases, and thousands of online journal subscriptions. This workshop will provide a guided tour of these resources, all of which are available to students both on and off campus.

Learn the many ways in which students can interact with the Library, whether through our Information Delivery Services, our Instruction Program, or our virtual Reference Services. Learn about the Library’s services for you as a teacher, including electronic reserves and online research guides tailored to your courses and assignments.

By incorporating the Library into your class, you will provide your students the tools and skills necessary to navigate information, search for literature in discipline-appropriate databases, and acquire the information they need for success with research papers and projects.

Theresa Westbrock is an associate professor at the New Mexico State University Library in the Reference and Research Services Department. She is the Library’s Instruction Coordinator, where she oversees the hundreds of library instruction sessions—and affiliated instructional resources—that take place in the library every year.
